Crafting workshop for refugee children

"Since learning about it in year 10 Social Studies, I have been keen to contribute to the refugees' resettlement process. I am especially passionate about helping young refugees bridge the gap by engaging them in extra-curricular activities so that they can gradually adapt to the new environment and culture.

After communicating with the Māngere Refugee Resettlement Centre, I identified the need for children to have more playing opportunities during their stay, so I decided to run crafting workshops for primary school-aged children.

Through preparing craft materials, recruiting volunteers and running workshops, I have developed skills such as initiative, collaboration and reflection while meaningfully engaging with a global issue. Despite challenges which became valuable learning experiences along the way, it has been so rewarding and fulfilling to see the impact I could have on people while also encouraging the people around me to get involved to support a cause I am passionate about."
